TUESDAY MORNING, JULY 30, 1867.

Cement Manufacture.

Another enterprise is about to be started which promises to contribute materially to the resources of this part of the country. At a point on the Columbia river, in Washington Territory, nearly north of Astoria and about seven miles from that place, good cement rock is found in the greatest abundance, and Messrs. Knapp, Burrell & Co are taking measures to commence operations upon it at once, with a view of supplying the markets of the Pacific coast with a better article of cement than has been brought here from abroad. Col. Belden has made an examination of the premises preparatory to the erection of the works, and reports very favorably upon the facilities which are found there for the manufacture of the article. This discovery has been known for some time, and a gentleman named Hopkinson, formerly a resident of this city, has been engaged in developing it in the face of very great obstacles, for which he is deserving of much credit and future success. A site has been selected for the kilns, the warehouses and the mills necessary for the work; buildings will be erected at once, and all the requisite preparations made for getting the business under way during the coming fall. Steam power will be employed for driving the machinery, as there is no water power at hand which is deemed adequate for the purpose. The quantity of cement rock is reported to be inexhaustible. There appears to be two varieties of it, one of which bears a close resemblance to the rock which produces the Portland cement, and the other similar to that of which the Roman cement is made. The strata in which the rock lies have been tilted out of the position in which they were deposited, and now stand nearly on edge. The quarry is easy of access, and but a short distance from the place where the mills and warehouses are to be erected. It is confidently believed that the work will produce a quality of cement superior to any imported to this coast. The best hydraulic cements of England are obtained from stone of a very similar kind. Portland cement is so termed from its resemblance in color to the Portland stone, and is noted for its extraordinary hardness and tenacity. Roman cement is so called from its similarity to that formed by the ancient Romans from substances very nearly resembling the materials of which this cement was first made in England. The process by which cement is manufactured is to calcine the rock nearly to the point of vitrification, and then reduce it to powder by crushing. A considerable amount of machinery is therefore required to carry on the manufacture. In order to make sure of obtaining machinery suitable for the work which has been undertaken, an order has been sent for it to the East. It is the intention of the gentlemen who have taken hold of this enterprise to manufacture at least 50,000 barrels of cement per annum. A barrel factory will be put in operation with the other works. From these preparations it will be seen that the undertaking is one of no mean importance. It is the intention to have the kiln and the necessary buildings erected by the time the machinery arrives, so that there may be no delay in obtaining results. Mr. Hopkinson has adhered through very great difficulties and many discouragements to his idea that the manufacture of cement at this place could be made a source of profit, and the energy and perseverance he has manifested in bringing the subject into favorable notice, are highly commendable. Our people will welcome this as an addition to the other growing industries of this section. A country so fertile in natural resources must eventually become great. The growth and advancement of the country is measured by the opening of each new field of industry. We have been relying on being able soon to supply the markets of the Pacific coast with iron; and there is equal reason to believe that from the Columbia river, this and other important articles will soon be supplied in sufficient to command the markets.

Bucking and Gagging.

From the published reports of the bandits' Convention held at Umatilla last week, it appears that the whole thing was a very tame affair. "Safety conservatism" triumphed, and genuine Democracy was entirely smothered. Under the control of the managers who captured the convention the outspoken honesty had no show whatever. It seems to have been another bucking and gagging affair, similar (if great things and small may be compared) to Johnson's Philadelphia Convention of last August. Humason and Brown choked down Dow and others who had called the Convention, and succeeded in passing a series of resolutions which enunciate nothing and have no meaning at all. So full are they of "glittering generalities" that they look as if they might have been written by Seward since he passed into his dotage. From the report we gather that Dow contended manfully for the "ancient land-marks," but was finally silenced by the passage of the namby-pamby resolutions. His paper, the Press, will probably contain a "minority report" appealing from the Convention directly to the Democracy. In this case he may be sure of being sustained. For if there is anything which the mass of that party abominates, that thing is hair-splitting, meaningless "conservatism." The "sturdy Democracy" of Eastern Oregon should by all means determine to have another Convention. And they should turn out in such force as not to be overslaughed by the tricky politicians whose object it is to repress true Democratic sentiments and by this means capture a few undecided men of Republican tendencies who would never join the Democracy if they knew the real objects of that party.

A very significant speech was made in Galena (Ill.) on the 21st of June, by Major-General Rawlins, General Grant's Chief of Staff. He fully endorsed the reconstruction measures of Congress; said that the governments created in the South by the President were provisional only, and that as they were both illegal and anti-republican, it was the duty of Congress to repress them; declared the constitutional amendment proposed by the last Congress a necessity created by the war, and said that its ratification should be made a prerequisite to the recognition of any government in the rebel States; expressed his opinion in the most decided manner that there could be no question about the constitutionality of the reconstruction acts, and said that as those acts were purely political, their validity could not be questioned by the Judicial Department. He expressed himself in favor of impartial suffrage, thought it was the only true and just settlement of the questions in dispute and was decidedly of opinion that all the States ought to adopt it. The relations between General Rawlins and General Grant are of the most intimate kind, and when the former makes a speech of this sort, it may not be too much to suppose that he shares the views of the latter. Under the circumstances, it is not strange that the President makers of the East, who are on the qui vive for items, should so understand it.

A Boston letter writer mentions as a significant fact the appearance in that city of W. H. Seward, the great anti-Masonic politician of thirty years ago, as the guest of the fraternity he used so vigorously to revile. But nobody now-a-days is surprised at any of the revolutions in politics or society.

It has been inferred that Dryden was not opposed to sherry cobblers from a remark he once made. Said he: "Straws may be made the instruments of happiness."

THE WIDE AWAKES AGAINST THE OCCIDENTALS.—The first game in the match between the Wide Awake B B. Club and the Occidental B B Club, was played yesterday at Vancouver, resulting in a victory for the Occidentals. The Wide Awake Club has been organized but a short time and has not yet had sufficient practice to play successfully against veterans, but before the season closes we shall probably have a better record from them than the one made yesterday. THE SCHOOLS.—OUR NOTICES OF THEM.—It has come to our knowledge that some of the friends of the Portland Academy and Female Seminary think that our brief notice of the closing exercises of that school, evince an unfriendly feeling, or at least, one of indifference toward the institution. They complain that we published very extended notices of the Catholic School while the Portland Academy only got a couple of brief paragraphs. This last complaint is based on truth, but we have this to say, in explanation. While the examination and closing exercises of the Catholic School were in progress, the friends of the school furnished us the most of the matter published—prepared, ready to go into the hands of the printer. The reporter had not the trouble to run after the information and then prepare it for the compositor. Being thus furnished, we published the matter, and was glad to get it. The first item in relation to the Portland Academy was obtained by the reporter who went to the residence of Prof Gatch for it. We were not present at the closing exercises, Friday evening, being necessarily engaged at the office, and, of course, could only depend on a friend who volunteered what was said in the next morning's paper. It is impossible for a reporter to be present on all such occasions, and attend to all other duties at the same time. If he get his information by word of mouth, from others, his items must necessarily be brief and couched in general terms. Had any friend of the school furnished us a quarter or even a half column of information about the exercises, we would have published, cheerfully, every word of it, as in the case of the Catholic school. It is not good sense to expect a newspaper reporter to be perfectly ubiquitous; to go everywhere, see everything, and give extended notices of everything and everybody. This can only be done by the volunteered assistance of the reporter's friends and the friends of the person or things to be noticed. In this case, the friends of the school (the teachers could not be expected to do it) should have taken interest enough in the matter to furnish the reporter with such facts and incidents as they desired to be made public, or not doing so, they should refrain from grumbling afterwards.

CIRCUIT COURT—SHATTUCK, JUDGE.—Proceedings of Monday, July 29th:

F. Schriber vs. A. Burchard & Friedman; submitted to the court on the pleadings; judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $284 03 and to be enforced against the joint property of both defendants.

Thos. Cully vs. Thos. Shields; tried by the court; judgment for the plaintiff against the defendant, in the the sum of $1 00 and costs.

L. M. Starr vs. Samuel Farmer; confirmation of sale of lots 3, 4 and 5, block 24, Couch's Addition to City of Portland.

H. C. Victor vs. I. A. Davenport; submitted to the court for trial.

Joseph Helmuth vs. John Collins; trial by jury; submitted to jury about 1:30 P. M.; no agreement at the close of adjournment of the court.

SUNDAY AMUSEMENTS.—A gay time is reported in Washington county among the fightingers, on Sunday and yesterday. A row occurred on Sunday at the house of one Kale Wilkins who lives about five miles from Hillsboro, between Wilkins, his son-in-law, known by the name of "Wild Yank," and a Mr. Carr. Wilkins struck at Wild Yank, whereupon the latter knocked Wilkins down with a gun, breaking the stock off. Carr then interfered and "Wild Yank" turned upon him and knocked him down six times with the gun barrel. Both Carr and Wilkins were badly cut and bruised. Wild Yank was subsequently arrested on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon. The sheriff was in search of Wilkins yesterday to summon him as a witness, but was unable to find him, high or low. His whereabouts is something of a mystery.

TROUT FISHING.—Mr. A. G. Bradford returned last evening from the Cascades, where he has been spending a week in superintending the work of getting out some mill machinery for storing, and in catching trout—mostly the latter, probably. At all events, we saw plenty of evidence that he had been fishing, but nary a machine. He gives a glowing account of the sporting about the lakes and streams of the neighborhood of the Cascades. He brought with him a fine lot of them nicely put down with ice in a box. They were as hard and cool as the moment when they slipped the fatal hook. He tells us that he sent down almost every day, to friends in this city, just such packages of trout as that exhibited yesterday. The trout fisheries about the Cascades must be something superior to the average.

PASSENGERS FOR PORTLAND.—The following is the list of passengers to arrive per steamship Orpheanne which sailed on Saturday from San Francisco: F. H. West, Mr. Bianchi, wife, child and servant, Master Simon, E. J. Western, S. Abrahams, Mr. Flanders, Mr Mastick, Dr. Haynes, J. H. Bean, Capt. Weeks, wife and servant, L. McDowell, Mrs. H. P. Douglass and child, Mrs. Norton, Mrs. Watkins, daughter and son, W. H. Hale, J. Wrieden, A. Mallett, A. O. R. Shaw, Jno. A. Woodward and wife, J. F. Bryant, T. F. Lord, Mr. and Mrs. Barry, Mr. Bellini, wife and daughter, J. Eckerson and wife, T. Richardson, John O Rellin, John Munster, W. H. Johnston, wife and three children, Mr. Magendee and son, W. H Foy and wife, W. Leggett and wife, H. J. Binke. Steerage—T. H. Scott, six chinamen.

COLLISION.—A small sail boat yesterday got in the track of the ferry boat and came near being run down by her. The occupants, by good fortune, got on board the ferry boat. It was not long since a small boat was run down and the man in it thrown into the river and compelled to swim for his life. The ferry boat is exceedingly unwieldy and difficult to steer. She sometime takes a very unexpected "swing around a circle" and small crafts, not immediately in the track, are thus endangered. A little caution on the part of managers of small boats about getting in the way, is decidedly advisable.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE COLUMBIA.—The U. S. surveying party for surveying the upper Columbia river, is fitting up a boat at Celilo for the purpose of ascending the river and removing some of the obstructions to navigation. The party will first go to the John Day rapids and blow out the rocks there which impede the passage of boats, and then go to Walula. Just above this point there is a reef of rocks which extends entirely across the river. This will be removed and then the party will devote itself to other points, the improvement of which was contemplated by the appropriation act.

GOOD TEMPLARS.—Capt E. G. Adams organized a lodge of Good Templars of twenty charter members, on Grand Mound Prairie, Thurston county, W. T. It takes the name of Grand Mound Lodge. The following is the list of officers: Jas. E. Baker, W. C. T.; Mrs Mary E. Baker, W. V. T.; Henry M. Goodell, W. S.; John Gove, W. F. S.; Miss Hannah J. Kinsey, W. T.; Leander H. Baker, W. M.; Jonathan D. Prince, W. D. M.; Richard O. Jones, W. I. G. & L. D.; Sylvester Symons, W. O. G.; Sylvanus Symons, W. C.; Alfred F. Washburn, P. W. C. T.

MEETING OF THE STATE TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.—The State Teachers' Institute will assemble this morning at the Central school house, at 10 o'clock. On account of the absence of Mr. Frambes in California, the notice of the meeting was not issued so soon as it should have been, and it may be, therefore, that the attendance of teachers from a distance will be small. This being probable, the teachers and friends of education, residing in the city, should by no means neglect to attend in full force and thus contribute to the interest of the session.

CONTRACTED.—Messrs. Northrup & Brannifif will complete their contract on Front street—filling and grading at Junction of Front and Jefferson—to-day and submit the work to the inspection of the Street Commissioner and the Council's Committee on Streets and Public Property. The contractors have done their work under all kinds of disadvantages, and we presume, at some loss; notwithstanding which they have done a good job and deserve the favorable consideration of the Council.

SOAP.—The soap boiling apparatus of Higgins & Co. was put in operation again yesterday, after having been idle for some weeks in consequence of high water. We trust that we shall not be charged with an attempt to sell soap somebody if we say that Higgins is making a superior article of fine soap.

RECORDER'S COURT.—In the Recorder's court yesterday morning, Patrick Maroney was called upon to answer the charge of being drunk and disorderly on Saturday, to which he pleaded guilty. Having been in jail two days the Recorder called it even between Patrick and the law and let him go.

GIVE US THE PROCEEDINGS.—If some one connected with the State Teachers' Institute will hand us each evening an account of the day's proceedings, we will take great pleasure in publishing them.

THE CONTINENTAL.—The steamship Continental arrived at San Francisco on Sunday the 28th.

WILLAMETTE FALLS.—Arrived per steamer Senator, yesterday, July 29th: 24 gunnies bacon, 6 cases do, 637 qr sks flour, 222 bags oats, 5 boxes produce, 3 trunks, 1 bale mdse, 2 cases do., 4 bales woolen goods, 2 cases do., 1 roll leather and 22 sks feed.

MOTION DENIED.—In the case of Davis vs. H. C. and J. N Victor before U S. District Judge, Deady on Saturday, the motion by defendant's counsel to dissolve the injunction against defendants, was denied

YOUNG PIONEERS.—This club meets for practice at 4 o'clock this afternoon

A 1 CASSIMERE SUITS at Barman Bros for $20.

A UNIVERSAL REMEDY.—"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" for Coughs, Colds, and Bronchial Affections, now stands the first in public favor and confidence. This result has been acquired by a test of many years. Its merits and extensive use have caused the Troches to be counterfeited and we would caution purchasers to be on their guard against worthless imitations.

IF THE BABY IS CUTTING TEETH, use that old and well tried remedy, MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, which greatly facilitates the process, and is sure to regulate the bowels. It relieves the child from pain, corrects acidity and wind colic, and, by giving the infant quiet, natural sleep, gives rest to the mother. Offices, 205 Fulton St., New York, and 205 High Holborn, London, England. Hostetter, Smith & Dean, Agents for the Pacific Coast

THE LADIES are in a glow of delight over the Brandy Dye Colors from the celebrated manufactory of Howe & Stevens. They say the colors surpass anything at the dye-houses, and are very much cheaper. Sold by Smith & Davis.

PERFECTLY ENRAPTURING.—Such were our feelings as we stepped into the Studio and Art Gallery of W. T. SHANAHAN, on First street, a few days since, and listened to the delightful tones and harmony which came from one of Mason & Hamlin's Cabinet Organs. From the soft breathing flute tones to the thundering bass of the pipe organ, all was equally free and sweet. And why is it other makers cannot produce instruments like these? Mason & Hamlin were the first to introduce the Cabinet Organ, and have gained such world wide notoriety that it requires the work of two large factories to supply the demand for these valuable instruments

A SPLENDID INVESTMENT.—We saw, yesterday, at J. L. Parrish & Co's something new in the way of an organ—a French instrument called the Organ Harmonium—invented by Alphonse Rodolphe. It is a very considerable modification of the organ as we have them from the American manufactories. It is provided with sixteen stops, each of which produces a distinct and peculiar effect upon the tone. The base stops are the Forte, Jeu Doux, Cor, Basson, Clarion, Bourdon, English Horn, the treble stops are Expression, Twenty, Scotch Bagpipe, Flute, Clarionette, Fife, Hautbois, Voix Celeste, Forte, and Knee or Full Expression. The effect of these stops in changing the tone is most surprising. For instance: from the Bagpipe Voix Celeste with Full Expression, the tone changes from what sounds precisely like a soft flute, to the full grand harmony which we would expect from an Angel choir—what the name imports. The Key-Board is movable and can be adjusted to any key, to any instrument, or to the voice of any singer. Other changes are no less surprising. The instruments are of the most perfect workmanship and of the highest finish; have taken the first medals at all the great European Expositions. The prices range from $175, to $600. Persons in want of an instrument should call and see them, for it is impossible to get a correct idea of them, except from personal inspection. J. L. Parrish & Co., are sole agents for the Pacific coast.

ADDRESS

Delivered by Hon. J. N. Dolph at Ames' Chapel, July 4th, 1867.

AMES' CHAPEL July 5th, 1867

To the Hon. J N Dolph—SIR We the undersigned, having listened with great interest to your speech delivered at Ames' Chapel on the 4th inst, and believing as we do, that its dissemination in the CHRONICLE—or some other public journal, would do much good—would most respectfully request a copy for publication

W P WATSON, W L HODGIN,

MATTHEW PATTON, JAMES DAVIES,
JOSHUA WILCH W N PATTON,
WILLIAM TUCKER.

PORTLAND OREGON, July, 5th, 1867

W P WATSON, MATTHEW PATTON, and others Gentlemen: Your note requesting a copy of the Temperance Address, delivered by me at Ames' chapel on the 4th inst., is received. The address, as you are aware, was hastily prepared upon short notice which may be some excuse for its imperfections, and prepared expressly for the occasion—a temperance address on behalf of the I. O. of G. T., in connection with the celebration of the national birthday, which accounts for the apparent digressions from the subject of the address. Such as it is, I place the manuscript at your disposal,

Respectfully, your obedient servant,
J N DOLPH

Ninety one years ago to day, the Continental Congress—appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of their intentions—signed the Declaration of Independence, and the bell from Independence Hall, Philadelphia, pealed forth in glad notes the birth of Liberty upon this continent. And as peal after peal waked the fires of liberty, and echoed from heart to heart through out the land, and went reverberating around the globe, it spoke of glad tidings of great joy to the oppressed of all nations. It was hailed with delight by every friend of freedom, by all who recognized the natural and inalienable rights of man. But it was the knell of despotism, that made the very foundations of the thrones of the monarchs of the old world to shake, and their crowns to not insecure upon uneasy brows. Ninety-one years have rolled away. The declaration then put forth by that band of patriots, who pledged "their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor," to its maintenance; "that all men are created equal" and "endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights," was maintained upon many a bloody field of conflict against fearful odds, of discipline and power, through disaster and defeat, hardship and want, for years in the ever memorable struggle of the Revolution, and was made good by the blood and treasure of the fathers of the nation, when victory, perched upon our standard, and our country stood forth free and independent among the nations of the world. From that day to the present time, our progress has been one continual march to greatness, from thirteen feeble colonies we have grown to be a great nation, our territory has been extended from time to time, mostly by peaceful acquisition, until it has been more than quadrupled in extent, and is washed by the Arctic ocean on the North, the Gulf of Mexico on the South, and on the East and West by the waters of the two great oceans of the globe, and bids fair to embrace the continent. From a population of three millions we have grown to thirty odd millions Our increase in wealth is without a parallel in the history of nations. Civilization, which then scarce had penetrated the western wilds beyond the Alleghanies, moving westward, has explored the wilderness, occupied and cultivated our vast domain, felled the mighty forests and caused the hill-sides and valleys to "bud and blossom as the rose" under the hand of industry, navigated our streams; opened up the treasure vaults of the mountains, and scaling the mountain tops, poured its attendant blessings upon these western shores, here and there within the memory of those that hear my voice, a handful of true men contended for the sovereignty of the soil, alike against British rule and the savages that roamed the forests, where no law but the law of might existed, the protecting ægis of the Government has been extended Agriculture, commerce, and manufactures have followed in its train. Education has reared its colleges and established its schools. Our citizens rest secure in the enjoyment of life, liberty and property under the protection of wise and equal laws Religion has planted here her peaceful standard, and we have taken a place among the States of the Union.

The Stars and Stripes float on every sea and commerce lays her trophies at our feet. Our name and flag are known and honored throughout the globe, and guarantees protection to every citizen of the United States, in every portion of the civilized world. Our shores have become the resting of the down trodden and oppressed of every land here they find shelter and protection in a land of equal rights, where the paths of knowledge, of wealth, of power, and of fame, are open to all But the founders of the Government made one mistake which came near proving disastrous to the Government and free institutions throughout the world. A century and a half before the day we celebrate, a little band of liberty loving pilgrims fleeing from the despotism and religious intolerance of the old world, and here in an unknown land raised the standard of Liberty, laid the foundations of a State to be rock-bound, and ever free from the blighting with poverty and want, with the rigors of the climate, and with the treachery of savage foes, they were too weak to assume the position of fears of despotism, until the principle had struck its roots wide and deep and the spirit of liberty had become the nurse and the grave hills of New England adopted home upon our shores, the struggle was renewed upon our shores, the struggle was fought battles of equal rights and aristocratic privileges. When Great Britain sought to prevent in the American colonies the tyrants hand, she sought but to regain the power she had lost forever, by indifference to the growth of freedom upon this continent, and she was but true to the theory of despotic power, that man is incapable of self-government; and when the framers of the Declaration of Independence asserted the equal rights of mankind, they asserted no new principle. It had long before shook empires to their very center, and deluged with blood the battle fields of the Old World, it was but the utterance of the spontaneous outbreakings of hearts that had been trained to Liberty by the Pilgrim Fathers. Despotism, which had so long ground under its iron heel the millions of Europe, sought here to build its Empire and maintain its sway; and found here "men who know their rights and knowing, dare maintain them." And here upon the shores of the New World, freedom gained her first substantial victory.

But after freedom's battle had been fought and won, and our fathers were about to construct a government upon the broad basis of the Declaration of Independence, a new difficulty arose: domestic slavery, which was in direct antagonism to the doctrines of the equal rights of man, must be recognized, legalized and protected. The great principle of freedom, but now triumphant, is yielded to the ancient foe in another form. They rear a temple of Liberty containing the elements of its own destruction. They endeavored to harmonize free institutions with the worst slavery the sun ever shone upon, and for over three-quarters of a century the angry clouds were gathering for the last and final "Irrepressible Conflict" between the opposing forces, thus woven into the very structure of our national existence. Treason, urged on by slavery, sought the nation's life, at plundered our treasury, scattered our navy to the four quarters of the globe; disarmed the North; stalked openly in the National councils; seduced the officers of the government from their allegiance, and even filled the Cabinet and other Departments of the government, until the good old ship of State reeled and staggered under its load of traitors in the surging billows of disunion and at last, the emblem of our Nation's honor and power, untarnished by insult from foreign foes, was trailed in the dust by defiant treason! Then the hosts of freedom said this Nation shall be free. All over the free North, one voice swelled from every heart. Rising on the shores of New England, it caught the spirit of Bunker Hill and the fires of Lexington, and moving West like a mighty wave, it gathered up the patriotic sons of the North and hurried them to the defense of the National Capital. Then were marshaled mighty armies in deadly conflict, until the world looked on in wonder. Again and again they met in the mighty shock of battle that shook the continent and left its thousands of martyrs upon the altar of Liberty. But the "Battle cry of Freedom" rose above the din of war. Faith in a just cause animated the hearts of our brave army and inspired them with courage to do and dare for country deeds that have carried for them imperishable glory, and the never dying gratitude of a country rescued from threatened destruction and triumphantly established upon the immortal principles of the Declaration of Independence. Slavery, with its last expiring strength, struck down the hand that struck it down in that immortal document, worthy to be inscribed in letters of gold upon the chief corner stone of the temple of liberty—the emancipation proclamation—and left the nation sorrowing and in tears, for its great leader then yielded up the ghost and died, and left the nation redeemed and purified, and the nation's flag floating in the breeze, in truth as in name, the flag of the free

Free, did I say! No! There is a slavery worse than death, that like a blight spreads o'er the nation, eats out its substance, blasts its fairest names, destroys its brightest minds and fetters its onward march to greatness. A slavery not alone of body, but a slavery that chains the mind and fetters the immortal soul Man may chain the body, but the mind immortal smiles on chains and is free.

But there is a slavery that winds its cords at first, like the gossamer threads of the spider web, round and round every faculty of the body, mind and soul of its victims until at last they find themselves the worst of slaves bound in chains of iron and fetters of brass, and every effort to break away but shows how firmly they are bound, a slavery that so benumbs every faculty that even the desire for freedom is lost This slavery is Intemperance which since Abraham Lincoln struck the shackles from four millions of bondmen, if it was not before, is the great national evil, and though it may not prove an element of discord to threaten the dissolution of the Union, it may prove nevertheless disastrous in its effects Almost contemporaneously with the Revolution our country was deluged with intoxicating liquors Seasons of festivities and sorrow, of labor and relaxation, of any dissipation and of religious solemnity, we are told were alike signalized by these drinks, "until drinking was barely less than universal, and drunkenness the fruitful cause of moral and pecuniary ruin" When the United States had reached less than one-third its present population, it was estimated that thirty thousand deaths per annum were caused by intemperance, and that one fourth of the females in the United States were sufferers from palpably immoderate drinking, usually of their respective Lords. Through the efforts of the various temperance agencies which have endeavored to stem the torrent of intemperance, drinking has become less universal. But still the great stream rolls on, a stygian stream of death that sweeps its victims into the great ocean of eternity at the rate of over sixty thousand a year in the United States, that still carries sorrows in some form to at least one fourth of the families in the United States No place is secure from its deadly influences they are found alike in the hovel of the beggar, in the palace of the wealthy, and in the halls of the great. No position is proof against their destroying power the child of poverty, the man of wealth, the learned and the unlearned, the man of wit, the man of genius, subject and ruler, have all quaffed the poisonous chalice, have all felt the bitter sting and found of a truth that "wine is a mocker, and strong drink is raging and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise"

When we state in general terms the aggregate results of this great evil, the mind fails to comprehend the figures, and to realize the enormous magnitude of this ever increasing flood of death and destruction. Perhaps a comparison will impress them with greater vividness upon our minds It is estimated that the gigantic civil war through which we have just passed, during its four or five years, cost three hundred and fifty thousand lives upon the battle fields and by sickness brought on by exposure They sleep upon many a sacred field, sacred forever in the memory of the nation for what they endured for freedom's cause. But humanity shudders at the thought many a mother's heart bleeds daily when she thinks of her darling boy, lost to her forever, many a father goes sorrowing to his last home, whose declining years might have been made glad by one who sleeps where the reveille shall no more waken his slumbers, many a wife looks in vain for the return of him who forsook all that was dear in life, at his country's call, but now "reposes in the silent city of the dead," many a prattler climbs its mother's knee and asks for papa who shall never again listen to the patter of its little feet, many a maiden pines for the loved one with whom she had plighted her girlish faith; many a sister weeps when she beholds some moments of brotherly affection, and the cloud of sorrow yet hangs heavy and dark over the land. But every six years intemperance slays more than three hundred and fifty thousand and leaves its bereaved fathers and mothers, wives, children and sorrowing friends, not the pleasing recollection that they fell gloriously in their country's cause, but rather the mortifying knowledge that they died wrecked in body and mind, and ruined for all eternity. But this, although, perhaps, the saddest effect of this vice, is by no means all the evil that follows in its train It is the fruitful source of loss, disaster and death. But a year or two since and the winged lightning brought us news that an ocean steamer, bound from New York to Aspinwall with passengers for this coast, had been wrecked and hundreds of human beings had found a grave in the watery deep, and it afterwards appeared that the officers in command had given themselves up to a drunken debauch, and suffered the vessel to drive out of her course to be dashed to pieces upon rocks and swallowed up in the angry surf. Yesterday morning I was awakened by the cry of "fire." In an hour the Oregon Iron Foundry was in ashes The loss is said to be eighty thousand dollars. During the day Mr. Masters, one of the stockholders, was in my office and said that "the fire was caused by a bucket of lager." And so it is every where, sunk on rocks, and unseen dangers, by night and day, upon land and sea, encompass these "that tarry long at the wine cup" and render not only their own lives and property insecure, but jeopardize also the lives and property of others. Intemperance annually costs the nation more than all our taxes and public expenditures of every description, and more than would be necessary to educate all our youth, build our churches and support the ministry of the Gospel, and in ten years the money, worse than thrown away upon this vice, would liquidate the public debt. Every person engaged in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks is kept at the public expense, because he does nothing to increase the wealth or resources of the nation. Every man that is engaged in an honest calling ought to be able to point with pride to the result of his labor. From the architect and master builder to the humblest mechanic, in every profession and calling, however exalted, however humble, that ministers to the necessities of mankind, the laborer may contemplate with pleasure the work of his hand. But where is the rumseller that can contemplate with self-conscious satisfaction, the desolation he has wrought? Would you see his handiwork, go with me to some legal den of vice, and contemplate the miserable wrecks of humanity, that drag out a wretched existence in the worse than living tombs, the slaves of strong drinks, all the joys of life withered, all the hopes of early manhood fled, filthy, bloated, bleared, loathsome, diseased, trembling upon the brink of the grave and the threshold of eternity. For some time my business required my attendance every morning in the Police Court of our city, and there I had abundant opportunity to contemplate those miserable objects of pity. There, morning after morning, the victims of intemperance were arraigned to plead to the charge of "drunk and disorderly" Men who once walked the earth in the dignity of manhood, now lost to all self-respect, and grovelling in the gutter until they become a public nuisance. Sometimes a kind word from a by-stander or a friendly caution from the judge, would elicit a gleam of the past, and disclose the ruin which had been wrought by the intoxicating bowl. But oftener they sat in sullen silence, heard the testimony of their shame, received the sentence of the law, and left the imagination to contrast the present with the past, to call up the history of their fall from innocence to degradation and crime Once health bloomed in those bloated features, once youthful vigor coursed those feeble frames; perhaps they dwelt in affluence, a fond wife and lovely children may have greeted their return from honest toil, plenty smiled upon them, prosperity attended them, love reigned in the domestic circle, joy dwelt beneath the home roof, and it may be that morning and evening the incense of earnest hearts rose to Heaven from the family altar But demon Alcohol entered that happy home, to blast forever all its hallowed influences, plenty was changed to want, prosperity to adversity, love to indifference, joy to bitter anguish, the fire went out upon the altar, and the name of God was only heard in the blasphemous ravings of impious lips. The wife who went forth from the home of her childhood, with all its pleasant associations, and fond recollections to cleave to him she loved, the man she fondly dreamed was all that is noble, it may be strengthened on in hope, with prayers and tears For the sake of her early love and her little ones, she endures poverty and reproach until "the cup of sorrow overflows," "the heart strings snap," "the silver cord is loosed, the golden bowl is broken, the pitcher is broken at the fountain the wheel broken at the cistern," and she sleeps "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest" The children, worse than orphaned, with the heritage of a father's shame, bereft of a mother's love and tender care, wander alone in a selfish world, and contend with its temptations and its storms, and yet proof against all entreaty, hardened to all this suffering, the wretched husband and father, bound with manacles too strong to be broken by the best resolutions, drifts helplessly down the stream covered with the wrecks of his earthly hopes. That great apostle of temperance, John B Gough, used to relate an incident in his early life which illustrates the utter helplessness of the confirmed drunkard to escape from the bondage of the wine cup When he was a boy of fifteen summers, his father being dead and his mother a widow, he was enticed by his young companions into the rum shop, and formed habits of intemperance and persisted in his downward course to ruin against the remonstrances, the prayers and tears of his mother Often when returning from his midnight revels, half intoxicated, he would, when passing his mother's room, hear her earnest voice in agonizing prayer to God, "Oh, God! save my ruined boy" After he had gone on in his course of dissipation for some time, regardless of the sorrow that was breaking his mother's heart, his mother was taken seriously ill, and for a week, while the issues of life hung trembling in the scale, he was repentant for his conduct, avoided his companions, stayed at home, and watched with tender solicitude at the bedside of his mother. At last the physician announced that the crisis in her disease was passed, and she was better, then longing for the genial company of his old companions in vice, he went forth for the first time with the intention of soon returning to the sick room He had promised his mother, upon what he supposed was her dying bed, never to taste alcoholic drinks again But he was not proof against the ridicule of his companions. His good resolution was broken He was induced to take "just one glass," when glass followed glass, until midnight found him staggering, and reeling under the influence of the intoxicating cup In this condition he found his way to his mother's door, and knocking in a half delirious frenzy, the door was softly opened by an attendant at his mother's bed side, upon tip toe and he was told that his mother was dying and wanted to see him. Then the hot blood curdled back on heart and brain, and memory with a thousand bitter pangs, recalled the shattered resolution of the morning. If he ever saw again the loving face of his fond mother, it must be now, while molten fires confuse his brain and remorse totters on her throne. He enters the chamber of death, staggers to the bed-side of his dying mother, and throwing himself upon his knees, buries his face in his hands with shame and remorse His mother opened her eyes a moment, and seeing her wayward son, roused her expiring energies to say, "John, how I love you! how I love you!" and passed forever where no word of penitence could reach her ear, and where no forgiving word could reach the sorrowing heart of her orphan boy and when in after years the "silver cords of memory" ran back to that death-bed scene, and recalled those thrilling words that spoke the mighty fullness of the mother's heart, 'John, how I love you! how I love you!' remorse like a scorpion stung the soul of the reformed drunkard and eloquent lecturer, and he would have given worlds, had he possessed them, if those words had been, John, I forgive you! I forgive you!" Oh, fearful bondage! I have seen the wretched slave of rum beg in vain with tears for one drop to quench that raging thirst that consumed him day and night, and drove him to desperation and despair

But is there no power to stay this remorseless flood, to strike the fetters from the captive mind, to heal the sting, bind up the wounds and assuage the woe of the poor victim of intemperance. "Yes, over the night of his debasement our order rises like a star of hope," with the light of love dispels the darkness, reaches the deep buried springs of feeling, strikes off the fetters, binds up the wounds and assuages the woe It proffers, in our pledge of total abstinence, a charter of freedom It snatches the victim from the power of the "invisible spirit of rum," and sends him forth a free man We have laid the ax at the root of the tree We recognize the truth abundantly established by medical testimony and confirmed by experience, that alcohol in every form is a poison, that, however diluted, its effects are essentially the same in kind, the bane of everything good, the progenitor of most of the evils that affect the human race. We seek to cut off the supply of drunkards, by abstinence from everything that can intoxicate, and by enlisting the mothers of the nation in the great work, so that the coming generation shall be trained up in habits of temperance, believing with Solomon that, "train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it"

But there is one aspect of intemperance which, considered as a national evil, is worse than all the rest Ours being a government by the people, it has been well said that the security of our institutions and the perpetuity of our government rest in the intelligence of the people The ballot box with us is a more effective weapon than the sword It decides the character of the government, and the destinies of the nation. But where is the security of our free institutions when elections are controlled by alcohol. What assurance have we of the perpetuity of our government when men are "bought and sold like beasts in the shambles," and stagger to the polls to exercise the elective franchise? Such corruption we have in every city of the Union The polls more resemble a mob than a place where American citizens, with a just appreciation of the liberties they enjoy, and the duties they owe as good citizens go to decide the destinies of this great nation. The South said, "Cotton is King," but I say, unless we can roll back this tide of corruption, Alcohol is King, and we are all subjects. But not alone at the polls is seen the effects of this vice. It enters the national Capitol. For years, beneath the roof of the same building where the laws for the government of this great and free people were made, intoxicating drinks have been vended by the dram, and on one occasion, if we may credit common report, at the close of the session, was brought into the hall of Representatives, and the session closed with a midnight orgie as disgraceful as was ever held by the votaries of Bacchus. Where, I ask, in the name of reason will be our boasted liberties if even the rulers of the nation will "put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains?" Sir James McIntosh, an English historian, taking a philosophical view of the decline and fall of the Roman empire, remarks that as long as the Roman Senate maintained control of the empire there was a stability which was lost when the emperors obtained control and the empire was governed according to the caprice and will of one man, and he sometimes an imbecile. Suppose we carry his philosophy one step further, and consider the instability of that empire that is governed by the drunken caprice of one or more men. Alexander, after conquering the world, and weeping because there were no further conquests, was invited by Medius to take part in a carousal, and history relates that he could not deny him. The conqueror of the world was himself a slave. He drank at this carousal until he died. The kingdom won by his sword was divided among his generals, who quarreled over his corpse, and soon lost all by their jealousies and disputes, that had been gained by their valor. If Alexander had lived, the Macedonian empire might have rivalled the Roman empire, and became the mistress of the world. We might multiply illustrations from history if time would permit, to show what disasters to nations have come through the wine cup. History is the past experience of all ages of men. We may go there for instruction upon the subject of temperance—and learn lessons from the experience of others It has been well said that we may learn wisdom from our own misfortunes, or from the misfortunes of others—that while the knowledge we acquire at our own expense is undoubtedly the most efficacious, that which we learn from the misfortunes of others is safer, inasmuch as we receive instruction without pain or danger to ourselves Well will it be for us if we profit by the lessons of history. The danger is not so far distant as to go unheeded when the Chief Executive of the nation, who came to his office by the act of a fiend in human form, urged on by the fell spirit of slavery, and who has so great a responsibility resting on him in binding up the wounds which war has made, and restoring harmony to the discordant elements of the nation, appears upon the birth day of the Father of his Country at the nation's capitol and in public so intoxicated as to disgrace the nation by his maudlin speech, and "swings round the circle" ostensibly on a pilgrimage to the patriot dead, but really to make drunken speeches about the Constitution and the "Rump Congress," speeches unbecoming the dignity of his high office, and disrespectful to his masters, the people. While we see at home in our local matters the damning influence of intemperance, we must not forget that it is also a national evil, and we should labor for its utter, complete extermination from our country and the world. As long as we sanction the sale of intoxicating drinks by law, we are partakers in the moral guilt of the rum seller We may gather within the circle our order those who need not the restraining arm of the law to keep them from evil, but in all ages men have found—and, judging from past experience, will continue to be found—who will not scruple to do any act, not legally wrong, and we might as well attempt to make life, liberty and property secure by moral suasion, or fault finding, as to restrain such men from dealing out death and destruction, without a prohibitory law But let us learn wisdom by past experience, and remember that this great reform must be made by moral agencies, that before legislation can be of any avail to stem the torrent of this great evil, public opinion must be educated and prepared for legislation; the legislative, executive and even judicial departments of the Government in this country must necessarily reflect to a great extent, the public opinion and if we want legislation we must be strong enough to elect temperance men, upon temperance issues, to the Legislature, it we would have a prohibitory law when passed, except the fate that the prohibitory law of the Empire State met with in 1854, we must see that no Seymour occupies the gubernatorial chair, and if we would have it pass the ordeal of the courts, we must see that the ermine of our judges is free from the stains of intoxication We have reason to thank God and take courage Three-quarters of a century ago and throughout the length and breadth of the land there was scarcely a warning voice raised against this evil. The earliest temperance organization upon the continent was that of the temperance society of Marion and Northumberland, N Y, instituted by Dr. B J Clark, of Marion, in March, 1808 Its constitution accepted "wine at public dinners," and only aimed at the prevention of gross intoxication But the temperance movement gained but little ground until as late as the year 1826, when the American Temperance Union was formed at Boston But still no temperance organization interdicted the use of wines, cider or malt liquors, they only required abstinence from distilled spirits, except when prescribed as a medicine, with the moderate use of the less fiery stimulants At length the true and only safe rule was adopted at the annual meeting of the Temperance Union, held at Saratoga in 1833, "total abstinence from all that might intoxicate" From this time forward, the cause of temperance received a new impetus, numerous temperance societies, rose, flourished and fell, but left an influence for good upon the public heart and mind. A little over twelve years ago the first lodge of our order was instituted upon this coast To day we number thousands, and although the night of intemperance has been long and dark, the watchmen upon the walls discern the light of breaking day We may labor in faith, for it may be as truly said of the battle for freedom from the power of rum as of the battle of civil liberty

"That Freedom's battle once begun,
Bequeathed by bleeding sire to son,
Though baffled oft, is ever won"

Garrison, Lundsay, Lovejoy and their contemporaries, who devoted their lives to the great cause of universal freedom, and through poverty, persecution and reproach, never shrunk from their life work, may have many times almost despaired of the final success of their course but for their faith in the ultimate triumph of right and justice But some of them lived to see the final struggle of freedom and slavery upon this continent, and to see slavery go down forever before the ruthless, onward march of the hosts of liberty, and although we of to day may not live to see the full fruition of our hopes, let us be content to labor and to wait, to leave our impress for good upon our generation, to fall with our faces to the foe, and our banner floating o'er us, never wavering, from our life work, never doubting the final and complete triumph of our cause The security of our national fabric rests upon the virtue of the people, and true patriotism will prompt to efforts to purify the national character. There is a Sovereign ruler of the universe, a "Divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will" He will work out for us and through us His wise designs, turn and overturn our purposes, and "causes even the wrath of man to praise him" It matters not though the church steeple crowns every hill top and the sound of the church bell be heard in every valley, though costly temples for religious worship rise in every city, if religion is a form, if christianity lacks the vitality to change the heart and purify the life, if the great national heart is corrupt, corruption will fester through every artery of the national body, and will surely sap the strength of our free institutions, and cause the temple reared on the foundation of equal rights of man to totter to its fall of its own weakness. For the command is not alone "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," but "thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and all thy strength" Temperance is one of the fruits of religion, and civil and religious liberty spring from the same parent stock. The true patriot must be a temperance man and a Christian, and a Christian must be a temperance man and a patriot

I have thus given you a glance at our national origin and career. I have traced some of the causes of our national prosperity and greatness I have not allowed my own hopes to be darkened by a possibility of our ultimate downfall and final ruin, but have rather presented to you in a spirit of patriotic expectation our national prosperity till time shall be no more. And while I have felt animated by just hopes of the future, firmly believing that the God of Nations has destined our people to be the great and mighty people of the earth, and our nation to be the bulwark of human freedom for all time to come, I have dwelt upon intemperance as the great cause that hinders our onward march to our high destiny, the great sin of the Republic, which, more than any other, is sapping the foundation of public and private virtue, and rivoting chains upon our people more terrible than those of that slavery so recently swept from the skies of our civilization by the sword, a sin which from the highest office in the gift of the people, through all the grades of life to the humblest voter in the land, corrupts the fountains of honor and patriotism, and unseals the tomb of premature death.

But I must now turn to a more general contemplation which, while it animates our hopes and cheers our progress, shall point the moral of this great day of freedom's jubilee and tell the triumphs of the principles of our Order, the triumph of temperance, charity and love, and point with the unerring finger of prophecy to that day of days, when King Alcohol shall go down with the other Kings of the earth, and be lost in the universal freedom of the race of man. Your organization was but a few years since as a Spartan band in the Thermopylæ of the world's freedom, and now your combined strength is an army whose progress is irresistable and bloodless, and which is hailed by the good with the universal shout of "God speed you on to victory." The rill that comes trickling down the mountain side, sparkling in the sunbeams, as it passes on points the mind not more unerringly to the mighty fullness of the ocean, than does your little band to the coming of that time when temperance shall cover the land as the waters do the mighty deep. O glorious day when Temperance, Liberty and Religion shall hold their peaceful sway over all hearts and all tions. The flag of freedom, our proud emblem, waves over millions of happy homes to-day, a day that foretells freedom's final triumph. To this end she has struggled from the olden time until now. Far in the ages past she trod the soil of Greece and rolled back the invading hordes of Asia. She stood by Leonidas at Thermopylæ, and shook the shores of Salamis with words of hope and cheer to man. She marched with the Roman eagles in the days of the Republic, and when its glory was lost in the splendors of the Empire, she fled to the northern climes, and reared her sons in the dark forests of the German Fatherland, and swayed the British isles to the scepter of her name and power, and when in the fullness of time oppressed Europe could no longer find a resting place for her feet or a home for her children, she fled to a new world and led her forlorn hope to the citadel of a trackless continent, and now on this glorious and immortal day she raises the banner of the free from the home of the brave till the hearts and hopes of her votaries in all the lands upon which the earthly sun now shines, hail and greet her starry banner; as it floats throughout the world, millions in heart and sentiment if not in vocal strains now join with us in the poetic numbers that speak its praises:

Flag of the free! hearts' hope and home,
By angel hands to valor given,
Thy stars have lit the welkin dome
And all thy hues were born in Heaven
Forever float that standard sheet,
Where breathes the foe but falls before us,
With freedom's soil beneath our feet
And freedom's banner streaming o'er us

One word more and I have done There is a sentiment in the human breast that rises higher than the spirit of human liberty, which raises man to hopes of immortality, where his earthly liberty shall be merged in the eternal liberty of God If we truly comprehend our destiny we shall see that we are to be the great medium of the coming of that time foretold in the prophecy when the nations of the earth shall blend in one common brotherhood, and worship at one common shrine, when "the sword shall be beat into the plowshare" and the spears into pruninghooks, when "the lion shall lie down with the lamb" and "the nations shall learn war no more." The star that rose eighteen hundred years ago upon the plains of Bethlehem, the harbinger of "peace on earth and good will to men," now shines from the mid day sky of the earth's progress, and is destined to shine with increasing splendor wherever the banner of liberty floats and to fill the whole earth with its glory. With the triune standard of Liberty, Temperance and Christianity floating o'er us, let us march on to the consummation of that grand, exalted day Then shall man stand upon the theater of that day in the perfect stature of the original design of his Creator, bound only with the living chain of being flung from the altar of the eternal and stand secure, though

"Heaven's whole foundation to its center nod,
And nature tremble to the throne of God"
